A long time ago when I [1. (a) am (b) was (c) has been ] a student, I [2. (a) take (b) took (c) has taken ] part in an English language workshop over the weekend for rather advanced learners. We [3. (a) sat (b) had sat (c) were sitting ] in a circle and the teacher was just about to begin, [3. (a) having introduced (b) have introduced (c) was introducing ] himself in a slight Northern accent. At that moment, a stocky man in his fifties, with glasses and [4. (a) wearing (b) was wearing (c) wore ] a suit asked, "Is it Queen's English we are going to use in our conversation?" Our teacher was kind of startled and didn't quite know what to say. The effect of the man's sentence on the rest of the group [5. (a) was (b) has been (c) would be ], however, devastating. Everybody seemed to [6. (a) have been asking (b) be asking (c) ask ] themselves whether the workshop was the right thing for them. I clearly remember feeling very bad about the level of my English and praying that the teacher [7. (a) would not (b) will not (c) did not ] pair me up with the man who [8. (a) spoke (b) had spoken (c) have spoken ]. I later found out that most of the other participants [9. (a) had had (b) have had (c) had ] the same feeling. We were very relieved when the man [10. (a) was left (b) had been leaving (c) left ] after the second hour.
