Who's watching? Reality TV and Sports (by Frank Deford)

It would seem to me that reality TV is nothing more than a form of sport. It's a competition, a game, but on a coast-to-coast basis it's more emotionally appealing than many of our sports. So I have to believe that as many people get interested in the reality show, they lose some interest in the old-fashioned sports.

The constant problem that sports in this country suffer from is that there are just too many teams playing too many games. People, especially local fans, can follow their teams, but only the hard-core zealots monitor a whole sport. As a consequence, especially in the team sports with myriad games—baseball, basketball, and hockey—home attendance may remain high, while at the same time ratings for national games decrease. That may sound contradictory, but it makes sense.

Let's just take one city as example. The good people in Dallas may have cared passionately about their basketball and hockey teams, but as soon as the Stars and the Mavericks were eliminated in the playoffs, I would suspect that a goodly number of the Dallas fans dropped their interest altogether in the NBA and NHL playoffs and started devoting their attention to the local baseball team, the Texas Rangers.

Reality TV focuses. There are only a small number of competitors and we get to meet them and know them well, a whole lot better than our friends in Dallas ever got to know the Calgary Flames or the Milwaukee Bucks during the regular season. In many respects, in fact, reality TV shows essentially start with the elimination playoffs which concentrate the mind without having to bother us with the long, boring regular season. Reality television shows also are scheduled for just once a week. Every competition becomes important, in TV language, "appointment viewing."

Football has become the one traditional team sport that continues to have a growing national audience, and a large reason for that is that there are only a limited number of games, with the vast majority taking place on the weekends. It's no coincidence, I think, that the one sport which has shown great ratings gains in the last few years in NASCAR, which follows the once-a-week NFL model. NASCAR is like an all-star reality show every week. Everybody who follows the sport knows all the major drivers. Contrast NASCAR, say, to the PGA, where each week there are different contenders. The casual fan can't keep them all straight, so he only stays tuned when Tiger Woods has a chance.

Familiarity is so important when we are watching any kind of game. If we know the contestants, we can decide whether we want to root for them or against them. That's why the NFL and the NBA drafts are more interesting to more people than most actual games. We become familiar with the prospects before the draft and get involved.

Anyway, with all the competition from the new once-a-week television competitions, maybe major-league baseball, the NBA and the NHL are just going to have to settle for having intense local followings with declining national impact, and the hero that a nation turns its lonely eyes to is not going to be a great star who hits home runs and scores baskets, but some guy who sings songs or picks a bride or gets a job with Donald Trump. Yes, indeed, your new American idol, but that's reality.

36. In the article, what is reality TV show compared to?

- (A) sports game (B) political campaign (C) TV rating (D) singing contest

37. Who are "the hard-core zealots," mentioned in paragraph 2?

- (A) enthusiastic sports fans (B) local fans who follow their teams (C) casual PGA fans (D) sports journalists

38. Which of the following statements is incorrect, based on the article?

- (A) Audience tends to know more about the contestants in a reality show than they do sports players.
 (B) There are too many sports games each year for the fans to follow all the time.
 (C) Reality shows rarely rely on emotional appeal to attract viewers.
 (D) For many people, drafts are usually more interesting than actual games.

39. Which of the following is most likely true about the author inferring from the reading?

- (A) He is greatly fascinated by reality shows.
 (B) He loses interest easily in games played locally.
 (C) He doesn't have a very high regard for Trump.
 (D) He is one of the Dallas fans.

40. As a conclusion from the essay, which of the following does not affect the viewing rate?

- (A) the number of games played each week.
 (B) audience's familiarity with the participants
 (C) the days of the week when games are scheduled
 (D) whether the game is played domestically or abroad

第貳部份：翻譯題 [請於答案卷作答]

V. 請將下列短文中二處畫線處譯成英文。譯句必須與原始短文契合，包括標點符號。(20%，每句十分)

Raising house plants involves nearly as much care and knowledge as raising children. First, both plants and children are sensitive to their environments. For example, a plant will grow faster and be much healthier if it is raised in an atmosphere of tender care. The same is true for a child, who will be happier and healthier if her parents love and nurture her. Similarly, proper care of house plants requires the owner to have a basic knowledge of plants. He must know, for instance, (1)他的哪些植物需要陽光直射，哪些植物需要保存在陰涼的地方，以及每株植物需要多少水以獲得最佳生長和外觀。

Parents, too, must have knowledge of their children's needs in order to provide what is necessary for their best physical and mental development. Finally, the owner of house plants must be willing to provide the best possible care for his plants. A child also needs time and energy from her parents, to play with her, to talk to her, and to care for her. (2)一般來說，快樂、健康的植物和孩子是額外時間，知識和精力的結果。
